For the first time, spectators did not have to risk their lives watching archery practice. Since the sport was held in the spring, it was held outside.

Under sports leader, Carmen Bereskin, and sponsor, Miss Mary Busser, the girls had some new target faces to aim at.

In intramural tournament was held in two classes, the Beginner and Intermediate. The tournament advanced from twenty feet to thirty, then to forty feet.

This ancient sport has become increasingly popular. The girls nursed sore arms and hands from the snap of the bow-string so they would be ready for Spring Sports Day held at Lunken Airport. There, competition was held between the various public schools.

This year, tennis was played during the fall season. Instead of the usual white shorts, blouses, and tennis shoes, the girls were seen wearing slacks and sweatshirts. Tennis was held at the Coy Field tennis courts on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Under the direction of Miss Verlie Meyers, the girls learned the fundamentals of serving and returning the ball. This year, seventy girls turned out for the sport, more than ever before.

Gay Stocker, sports leader, drew up tournaments for both beginners and advanced tennis players. By the process of eliminations, the competitive field was slowly reduced until only the top players remained in both classes — Diane Carey, Bobbie Daniels, Gay Leberecht, and Carolyn Clark. However, due to the early arrival of winter, the finals of the tournament were postponed until spring.
