Pupils Get Special Help

Hughes High School offers several different kinds of special classes. It is the only city high school with courses for deaf students. With Mr. John McDaniel as teacher, the deaf students learn to use the manual alphabet and sign language. They also learn to lip read by imitating their teacher.

Mrs. Myrtle Jones and Mr. Thomas Moore are each in charge of a tenth grade special education class. In these classes, started only this year, pupils who find the regular curriculum too difficult can fulfill the requirements for a special high school diploma while preparing themselves to earn a living after they graduate.

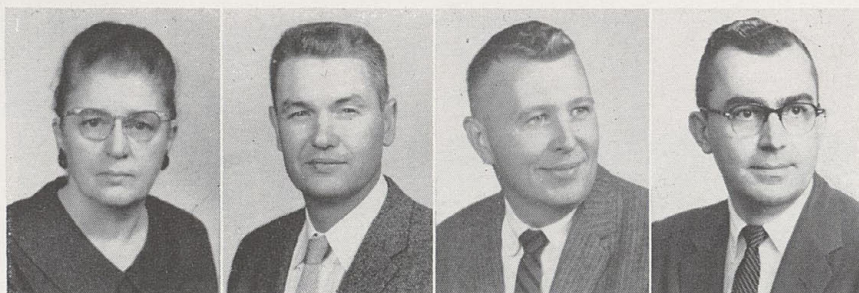

Mr. Jack Whitaker is a speech therapist. Some students have speech difficulties of various types, many of which can be corrected or eliminated with the proper diagnosis and training. Teachers recommend boys and girls who should avail themselves of the special help that Mr. Whitaker's training and skill enable him to give. Students appreciate the improvement they make from month to month in overcoming their own peculiar problems of speech.
