bers had tentatively finished their sections, and everyone knew the final deadline was drawing near. Typewriters were pounded harder now, and editors were working madly cropping the late pictures, writing copy, and making up last-minute headlines and captions.

Then, one sunny day in spring the annual staff's job ended! The final piece of copy had been sent to Nashville to complete the yearbook, and the Sparkling Sixties was finished.

At last the staff could sit back, relax, and wait for their pride and joy to be distributed throughout the school. They held the hope that the annual would sparkle for everyone at Hughes, bringing them memories of happy times and many events that occurred in the thrilling year of 1960.
