

English classes find the school library is very helpful. Robert Thiess, Henrietta Mahon, Gloria Tennant, Susan Young, Natalie Wright, Wanda Meece, Clarence Graves, and Bob Wescoe, all members of Mrs. Bullock's English class, are here working on special reports in the library.

Good English, Today's Need

The study of English encompasses more than just the actual study of the English language. It includes literature and composition, and also subjects such as journalism, dramatics and speech.

At Hughes, students are required to study English in the seventh through eleventh grades, and they usually elect to take it in the twelfth grade also. In the ninth through twelfth grades, they may elect courses in dramatics, speech or journalism. Also in the English field is the new program in reading. In this course students learn to read more rapidly with full comprehension.

English, our native language, should be written and spoken correctly. This ability to use English properly is an absolute necessity. It is important not only as a means of communicating, but as a basis for the study of other languages. In order to succeed, one must be able to communicate correctly, in writing and in speaking.

Miss Wycoff uses projector in the new speed reading program.

