

FOREWORD

Since ages past, a lovely, old castle has stood in a not-so-far-away land. In this castle dwell young people, who are eager to discover the world. Also, there dwell older people, who are anxious to teach the young about life. To look at the castle, one would think it was like any other. But it isn't! This castle has more keys than anyone has ever seen! There are keys of every shape and kind, each one opening the door to a treasure. With such treasures, one would think that the castle would be closely guarded. But the king of the castle is as wise as an owl. Each year he issues a proclamation that any who wish to do so may use his wonderful keys. The eager, the energetic, the lively ones take advantage of the offer. The castle is still the meeting place of all who want to discover and to understand. This Castle is Hughes High School. And this book, a record of life in the castle through the days of 1965, discloses how active the dwellers are in using the keys of the castle.
