

Book day again in Miss Pollard's eleventh grade English class! "Please fill out your book card."

"I never could learn the principal parts of all those irregular verbs," complain these students.

Mr. Stephens, English and journalism teacher, uses new over-head projector in his classes.

"Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow . . ." Senior students remember this passage from Shakespeare's tragedy, Macbeth, as one of their most difficult lessons in interpretation during their junior year of English. The works of Dickens, Hardy, Frost, Willa Cather, and many other authors, provide hours of reading and study for students determined to gain a greater appreciation of literary masterpieces.

Literature is only part of the curriculum, however, There is also that old foe, grammar. Fortunately, Hughes has qualified and experienced teachers, who stress the fundamentals of our language and furnish students with a solid background of good usage for speech and writing.

Since Mrs. Hamlin resigned as chairman of the English Department last June, Mr. Bradford and Mrs. Entzminger now head up the senior high and junior high sections, respectively.

Mr. Bradford, Mrs. Entzminger Head Largest Department