

The most obvious duties of a high school's faculty, teaching students and managing the school's affairs, are well performed by Covington Catholic's faculty and should not go unnoticed.

No student, however, remembers a faculty member as a teacher or administrator. He remembers what none of the following photographs can express: that peculiar smile (or frown), the habits, the jokes, the expressions, in short, the personality of each man he has known during his four years at Covington Catholic.

It is hoped that these pictures, can, at least, bring to mind recollections of the men who transformed a brick building from an education machine to a human experience.
