CONTACT for the Yearbook.

J. P. Lyons is a worker; one of the few around who can work without praise or acknowledgement. Independence from praise is a valuable gift, more valuable than praise itself.

J. P. is responsible for the great success which the CONTACT had this year. In switching the format from magazine to newspaper, he was able to print more news more often than ever before. He handled a large staff of writers fairly and wisely, thus keeping the CONTACT readable and interesting. By stressing individuality in writing, fresh points of view, and personal and objective evaluation of events, J. P. was able to print articles by a staff writing not of necessity but of interest.

The staff seemed to draw their interest from J. P. himself. He often stayed at school from dismissal until ten or eleven o'clock working to meet the deadline. Often he had to proofread, edit and type all the articles with the help of only a few interested staff members. But then J. P. never asks for much help; he would rather do it himself whether he has to or not.

The result of his efforts was a new CONTACT, full of new features and modernized standard features, to keep pace with the new school Covington Catholic has become. No, J. P. could not have done it alone; he needed the help of the moderator Mr. Dorn, the great work of the staff, and the occasional aid of a typist, for J. P.'s typing is too much "hunt" and not enough "peck." But even though he could not have done it alone, J. P. Lyons would have tried: that's the way he is.
