Hey,

You've been a darling girl, and we've certainly had a busy, but friendly year, haven't we? Thank you for all your help in Biology and Latin, and Mr. Ohaus for teaching me the value of precision. Remember the Variety Extravaganza, and getting kicked out of Brewer for dancing? I'll never forget that, Jane. Or the kid fitted for an eye patch, or the time we danced in my room to "Pam, you just don't understand," and I didn't ask you what you wanted, and you didn't ask me what I wanted, and we both had a miserable, awful time. But then, Blake, because you're you and I'm me, we managed to work it out, and I think we've become pretty good friends. Well, anyway, I'm certainly glad we met, Blake, because you've taught me so much about people, and myself, and I'm sure I'll need it in the future. But then, I'm sure you'll do just fine, Blake, because you're you, and you've got that certain something that makes you stand out in a crowd. Yes, I'm sure you'll do just fine, Blake, because you're you, and you've got that certain something that makes you stand out in a crowd. Yes, I'm sure you'll do just fine, Blake, because you're you, and you've got that certain something that makes you stand out in a crowd.

Jane,

Pam

P.S. Hard luck with "your person."
