

● we get lost, too!

● With the first sight of the imposing grounds and buildings of Withrow, a new teacher experiences much the same feeling as a freshman. The walls of the buildings seem to press in and around until the person viewing them feels small, insignificant, and bewildered. So it was with Miss Brewer. Since the beginning of the year, however, she has, through her association with an interested and helpful faculty, begun to feel right at home. Furthering this feeling is an intelligent and co-operative student body with whom she has associated in her classes and extra-curricular activities. Withrow may awe from the outside, but the warm, human friendliness of the inside soon wins over each and every person who enters its portals.
