

With visions of quizzes still in their heads, students absorb more knowledge from their friends they refer to as teachers.

In a lecture, it has been said, "Notes go from the professor's notebook to the student's notebook without passing through the minds of either;" but this problem has been overcome in the present-day classroom. Of course, an outline is needed; but for the icy formality of old-fashioned schools has been substituted a relaxing discussion that may stray to other fields and makes the class one to be shared, not shunned.

rehashing those fiery class debates about heredity