

BOYS' SOCCER

They are as fancy in their ball skills as the Harlem Globetrotters and almost as well-traveled. The difference is that these guys work their magic with a soccer ball. And most of their globe-trotting was done just to get here.

Consider the beauty of the following game-action sequence that lasted only a blink: The Salvadoran headed the ball to the Senegali, who trapped it to his chest, then dropped it to his feet, before flipping it back to the Salvadoran, who launched a scoring pass to another

Senegali who crisply centered it to a third Senegali, who slyly drew in the opposition--then slipped a slithering service to an Afghani, who blasted it into the right back corner of the net. Goal! by Cinit Enquirer journalist, John Erardi
