The American Red Cross Life-Saving Corps was formed by the American Red Cross to prepare individuals for making rescues when necessary and to decrease drownings through knowledge and skills. Not every girl in the group will pass the rigid examination of the Red Cross, but those who do will have to show a superior mastery of all swimming skills and life-saving techniques. Upon passing the Senior examination, the girl is eligible to serve as assistant instructor at camp, bathing beaches, playgrounds, and indoor pools.

The course is a very difficult one, but those who participate in it feel that it is well worth the time and effort.
