

I shall always cherish the many happy relationships that I have experienced with the class of 1944 in my first year on the administrative staff of Woodward High School.

The teachers and students have assumed many responsibilities related to the war effort, while at the same time continuing their work in "Education for Citizenship". We are justly proud of the morale of our students under the trying circumstances they have encountered amid the confusion of a global war. While the students themselves deserve much credit for their attitude, we believe that the parents are responsible for much of it.

May the commencement season be prophetic of the good fortune and merited preferment of each and every member of the class in the decisive issue of life. In our free America, the testing challenges of the future can be successfully met by an educated, trained, disciplined personality.
