

"We never once heard a word of politics fall from his lips."—Dr. Porter.

"His chief pastime was playing cards."—Rigdon.

"All gall is divided into three parts."—Stroh, Burbank, Barg.

"The thought of it was too much."—Bacteriology.

"Shear me not of my hair, for therein lies my beauty."—Martin.

"Give your collar a party and invite your chin down."—Beinhart.

"An idle young fellow who came to town for a time."—Herr.

"Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong."—McClelland.

"Of such vinegar aspect."—R. D. Smith.

"Not Hercules could have knocked out his brains, for he had none."—Joe Grimes.

"He is a man with unbounded stomach."—Kemper.

"How we loved him, for he was a man after our own hearts."—Dr. Cassidy.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever."—Harris.

"Give me a cigarette, I want to complete my bliss."—R. M. Brooks.

"Nobody knows but me."—Morlidge.

"We are here to do his will. He is master."—Dr. Way.

"Don't leave the bottle where he can get it. He might be tempted to take too much."—Stratemeyer.

"A villan, a liar, a mean horse-thief,
All these and more make an editor-in-chief."

—G. S. Brooks.

"Unthinking, idle, wild, and young."—Cahill.

"Proud that he has learned so much."—Morris.

"If dirt was trumps, what hands you would hold!"—J. E. Price.