

Waiting for their food, Ashley Pollack, Betsy Bass, Stuart Fink, and Robin Zimble chat at a Skyline booth.

The Sycamore Scene

Teenage "hangouts," a place of security where everyone meets to share his/her utmost dreams, gossip, and happenings of the day. Conversations range from the latest couples to the latest fashion trends. Students go to these places to fill their empty, growling stomachs, to exchange thoughts, and to have a grand ol' time...Let the fun begin!!

It is 2:19 in the afternoon. Not just any afternoon but a Friday. Yea! There is one more minute left of this school week and then it is PARTY TIME! Three, Two, One... As the bell sounds throughout the school, a hum of loud, thunderous voices can be heard channeling through the halls trying to get out of the place some of the students despised. Familiar words like, "mall," "guys," "Skyline," "girls," and "party," are just a few of the many words escaping from classmates' mouths.

As sophomores Kerri Menz and Latisha Sutton planned their evening at the mall, so did freshmen Erica Meno, Lee Ann Kass, and Lisa Rice. Meno said, "We go with a group of girls to meet guys and just hang out."

As these girls traveled to the mall, senior Chris Geraghty commented, "I will go anywhere such as Skyline or a party, as long as there is something to do."

News traveled fast as the word "Skyline" echoed throughout each classroom. Soon, it seemed like hundreds crammed and packed like sardines in this small restaurant which is capable of holding a capacity of 25. Junior Matt Berse jokingly remarked, "I love Skyline. The coney is cheap and it is a great social atmosphere."

However, junior Lee Williams liked hanging out at the Shell gas station after everyone had departed from Skyline. When asked, "Why Shell?" He responded, "I meet some buddies of mine there and we hang out all night. It may sound humorous but Shell is the happening place for some of the junior guys."

Whether at the bowling alley, mall, Skyline, or even Shell, students can always find a place to have fun. As for the students, we will never forget the places we found in order to talk about "EVERYTHING." For us, it is fascinating to just "hang out".

A coney is a favorite item on the Skyline menu, and Scott Zimble demonstrates how to properly eat one!

Shailee Patel, Stef Hutchison, and Linda Abusway make the public library their hangout - but not by choice!
