

student life

Edited by Katie Kettlehake and Brittany Lewis

 The student body had a lot of opportunities to get involved. Students had the chance to participate in everything from school dances to the annual Blood Drive. Although there were some changes in the activities this year, they were still enjoyed by many.

For instance, Winter Break was shortened to a mere week and a half instead of being the usual two weeks. There were also many chances for students to express their talent. Events such as Battle of the Bands and the Variety Show led students to show off their skills. The theater department was also busy putting on productions such as "The Yellow Boat," which ran in the fall.

People who did not play competitive sports had their chance to be involved on a team with intramurals. Anyone who wanted to could form teams and compete in Ultimate Frisbee and Intramural Basketball.

The great diversity of the student body was also demonstrated greatly through activities. The flags of the 42 countries that our student body came from were displayed for the majority of the year in the IMC. In addition, Diversity Day and presentations put on by Black Student Union taught students about the culture of those around them. All in all, the student body had many events to participate in and experiences to learn from.

Aaron Lee, 12, gets students involved in the winter pep rally. Drumline was only one of the many groups who performed or presented during the event. Pep rallies were held for the fall, winter, and spring seasons to boost school spirit.