Gabriel Villamizar, 11, and Ruth Ann Chernausek, 12, pose for pictures. "I really liked that I didn't have to pay for dinner—my date took care of everything. It was nice," said Villamizar. Many other students went with dates in other grades, as well.

Lindsey Harris, 9, experiences her first winter dance. This was a new experience for freshman because the girls asked the boys to be their date. "I really like going to dances and being able to dress up," said Harris.

Caitlin Rettenmaier, 11, dances with date Mark Aslanides, 12. Couples has a good time dancing together, even to fast paced songs. A date was not necessary, though, to have a good time. Many just danced with friends.

Mattie Hulett, 10, and Drew Kruger, 11, prepare to go to the dance (above). Hulett asked Kruger weeks before the dance by putting a sign onto his car (right). Many girls came up with creative ways such as this to ask their dates.

David Barnard, 12, and Rachel Hershberger, 12, exchange flowers before the dance. The two went to dinner at Teller's with a group of friends. "It was nice getting dressed up and going out to dinner for a change," said Hershberger.

Myles Lewis, 12, steals the spotlight on the dance floor. "To be funky is not just an occurrence for a night, you have to breathe, bathe, and breed funk wherever you go," said Lewis. Many others took after Lewis, using their crazy moves to make the night unforgettable.

Frank Ebetino, 12, and Rosemary Griffen, 12, sway to a slow song. Only three slow songs were played throughout the whole night. For the most part, the music that was heard was very upbeat.
