

Valerie Rozzo, 11, concentrates hard in Guard practice while learning a difficult new routine to perform at halftime. Below is the final routine in action. Practice obviously made perfect in this act. The crowd went crazy for Guard's performance while they amazingly threw their flags into the air and caught them.

“Being the only guy on guard is really fun. I get to hang around with a bunch of girls!”
- Josef Kisor, 11

Color Guard performs at a varsity football game. With their new uniforms, the team looked good together on the field. The crowd loved the colors and dances.

“Joining guard was the best decision I made this year!”
-Brynn Sharp, 9

The team prepares for their performance. The games were their time to showcase their talent. They practiced at the junior high and worked on synchronizing their moves.

Color Guard waves flags

The Color Guard took the field every football game, confident in their abilities. With their unique black and white uniforms and their colorful flags, the guard was an appealing act to watch every halftime.

Color Guard did not only practice hard in the fall; there was also a winter team. The difference between Winter and Fall guard was that Fall Guard performed for chaotic football fans, and Winter Guard performed for judges and was rated.

“Winter guard is so different from fall. It's more nerve-racking. The judges are right in front of you and you can hear what they are saying!” said Katy Staples, 9.

Winter Color Guard participated in one competition and placed third in their class!

Color guard takes the field during halftime. With their matching uniforms and brightly colored flags, Guard kept the crowd going until the football players returned to the field. Through the nerves and adrenaline, Guard kept their cool and once again gave a picture perfect performance.

1. While Color Guard marches proudly during an annual parade, they wave their flags high with school spirit. Leading the pack was senior Jessica Burke, 12. With this being her last year, her and many other seniors on the team made the best of Color Guard. 2. Preparing for the big homecoming game, Color Guard takes over an empty soccer field for practice. Many long hard hours were used for practicing difficult dance and flag routines. 3. With their adrenaline pumping, Color Guard takes the field at one of the most special football games of the year, Homecoming. With their brightly colored flags and their eye-catching uniforms, Color Guard kept the crowd entertained. 4. With their spirit and energy still going, Color guard makes a quick change in their flags and continues dancing for the Homecoming football game. Color Guard's hard work and dedication clearly shined through that night.
