

a night

I was backstage and saw the dragonfly kids go back to their dressing room after having walked away. The smiles on their faces and their pure excitement was a special moment for me to witness.”

- Hannah Peri, 11, FFTC committee member

For just one night, dress up fancy and immerse yourself: enter the theatre and watch a dazzling fashion runway featuring priceless designs created by Sycamore high school students themselves, prom dresses and tuxedos that sparkled under the 'lights, and even casual wear from the local Alley Boutique in Loveland.

Every year, a committee of students put so much of their time into organizing the annual Fashion For the Cure fashion show that raises money for the Dragonfly Foundation, an organization supporting child cancer patients and their families. This year was its 16th annual showing. In all, FFTC was able to raise nearly $59,000 from small fundraisers done throughout the year as well as everything raised from the night of the show.

Co-chair Payton Hines, 12, found her favorite part of the show was the final walkthrough of all the models, designers, committee members, and Dragonflies. “There was something so special about the energy of the audience and the excitement on the Dragonflies faces,” Hines said.

