

hoops, they did it again

Girls Varsity Basketball brings Sycamore to victory

The varsity girls basketball team has had ups and downs throughout the year, but in the end they were able to come together as a team. This year several underclassmen joined the varsity team and were able to help the team work their way through the tournament and made our school proud.

Leah Riley, 12, who joined the varsity team as a freshman herself said "We were very young. We had lots of sophomores, lots of underclassmen on varsity. And I felt like we overachieved...we made it pretty far in the tournament." Despite large age gap between the girls on the court they work effectively as a unit and off the court often function as a family. For these girls this is not just a high school basketball team, it is a community that transcends age differences. Working as team can be difficult when at times you have nothing in common with your team mates, but the girls have learned how to work together.

