

Every year in the beginning of summer, the graduating class of Sycamore High School is recognized and lauded in their commencement exercise. For their teachers, parents, and friends, it is the culmination of four years of growing and learning. For the soon-to-be graduates, it constitutes the opportunity and challenge of college and adult-life. But the commencement and the subsequent celebration fall far short of properly commending the class of 1986. Although not always appreciated or understood, the myriad of accolades, scholarships, and awards that this class has accumulated place it with the best classes to have ever graduated from Sycamore.
