Surrounded by fellow teachers in Armenia, Mrs. Marnie May, English, stayed with the teacher who lived with her as a part of a cultural exchange program. Witnessing history in the making, May observed an election in process. The first time people from Armenia tried and used ballots for their election. Things went bad when people tried to vote twice by using fake ballots.

An experience of a lifetime. Mrs. Marnie May, English, traveled to Armenia, the former Soviet Union, for a three week teacher exchange program. May was exposed to classroom settings from kindergarten to university.

"I liked the university levels better. They were more interesting because they spoke more English," said May. "Their classes were all taught in English."

May had reciprocated the visit of an exchange teacher who had stayed with her last fall.

May was in a culture shock when she arrived. It was nothing like she had expected.

"They don't have much money. When people get married, they go back and live with their parents," said May. Everyone lives in flats or apartments.

In Armenia, May noticed that there was no access to heat, and use of water was limited to four hours during the day.

Even though May said that things were cheaper, there was not a lot to buy. If teachers were paid, they received $20 a month.

May stated that their methods of teaching were different than in the U. S. Students were to have homework memorized. If a chapter from a book was assigned, it was to be memorized for the following day... word for word.

May noticed that there were no after school activities for the students. They do not have any parks there and they have no gym classes, but they eat very healthy. They have family time at all of their meals.

"Family time is celebrated," said May.
