Many people remember sitting in front of their televisions when they were younger awaiting Mr. Rogers' friendly face to appear on the screen. Fred Rogers' ability to connect with children through using puppets to act out fairy tales and stories was something not many could aquire. At age 74, Rogers died after a short battle against stomach cancer. "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" became the longest running program on PBS airing from 1967-2001. Rogers' shows taught children how to cope with divorce, death of pets, and many more issues. The main goal was to get children to love themselves.
