

ELIZABETH DYER, A.B.
Director of the School of Household Administration

To be effective in one's environment is a proper ambition. Realization of that ambition depends upon our knowledge of our environment. That is why education is daily coming closer to life as it is lived. The new education for women is illustrative of this progress. It meets the requirements incident to the marked change in the economic and political status of women. Society expects intelligent women everywhere to be informed regarding their responsibilities, and to exercise judgment and skill that match their responsibilities as professional women, as citizens and as administrators of the home. The changes in our economic environment are compelling more and more women to work; the community needs the aid of the educated women citizens; management of the modern home and the training of the child call for scientific knowledge. The School of Household Administration meets these new problems of women. It trains for professions, for citizenship and for the home. It offers fundamental knowledge, the skillful use of which means zest and harmony in living.
