

Mary Rowe Moore

Because she cares no more for king than beggar, says the things she damn well pleases, and realizes that as long as they are unusual enough she can get away with them.

Louis Nippert

Because beneath the rotund exterior of a lamb, he conceals the appetite of a Bacchus, the technique of a Byron and methods of a Pan.

Mary Layne

Because she might be a modified version of the same thing after all.

Dean Chandler

Because of that Platonic sweetness and nobility of mind, that simple naivety of manner and, alas, that ironic accident of environment.
