Football Resume

DARK was the hour in Cincinnati when the Red and Black eleven turned in mediocre scores cards for their first three games of the season. Heads were shaken in despair, and there was talk of forsaking football at the University of Cincinnati. But R. George Babcock, stalwart varsity mentor from the wastes of Michigan, smiled and worked and said not a word. His efforts, however, were notably rewarded. The great Dayton team touted as the most powerful fighting organization in Ohio almost fell before the stark thrusts of Filger, Bryant, and Post. Cincinnati's defense in that game was phenomenal, and remained so for the balance of the season.

Coach Babcock had no light task when he undertook to train the Bearcat machine. An outworn system had to be discarded to be replaced by the Yost brand of ball that has made Michigan the terror of the Big Ten. It was a case of building a team from the bottom up. It proved even a heavier task to form a winning organization from the mediocre material that reported for practice. Although never a great scoring combination, Varsity, for the first time, made never a fumble, passed effectively, and played brilliant defensive ball that brought the mob time after time to its feet.

Thornbury and Filger received places on the second mythical All-Buckeye eleven. Mayer and Schott received praise from the local press. Nine letter men were lost by graduation, or the three-year regulation: Filger, Dial, Mayer, Lothes, Barrett, Thornbury, Christy, Bryant and Fennekohl. "Bus" Schott was named captain at the annual football banquet.
