

The Red and Black holds

In the fourth encounter of the season, and the first Buckeye Conference game, the Red and Black warriors astounded their partisans by playing a brilliant defensive game in the opening half. The Bearcats then proceeded to weaken disastrously and what had started out as a football epic for McMicken ended in a near rout, with Wesleyan's heavy line pounding huge holes in the lighter Cincy forward wall so often that four touchdowns were piled up in the final half.

Varsity started the game with a dogged defensive ability, and, although not outplaying their more experienced opponents, they at least held them even through the first quarter. Wesleyan gained consistently until the Bearcats' ten yard line was reached, but could not penetrate further, the Cincinnati boys holding for downs five times. With this dogged resistance, the spectators were treated to a punting duel with neither team having any decided advantage.

Wesleyan penetrated to the Red and Black one-foot line early in the second quarter but with Hallett's inspired playing setting an example, the Bearcats emulated the proverbial concrete wall and took the ball away from the Battling Bishops. Wesleyan was not to be denied, however, and near the close of the half broke loose to tally her first touchdown. The second half started as another kicking duel, but the invaders soon took advantage of erratic playing by the Bearcats to score a second touchdown, this time as the result of a blocked kick and four smashes at the weakening Cincy line. The rest of the third quarter was scoreless, with neither team showing any offensive ability. In the final quarter, however, Wesleyan sent in almost an entire new team, and this reserve strength proved to be the undoing of the Bearcats, for they weakened lamentably and the Bishops shoved over three more touchdowns without much opposition. The game came to its dreary close with Wesleyan again threatening to score.

Varsity failed to show even a semblance of an offense, her running attack being smothered completely by Wesleyan's heavy line, while not a single pass was completed. The only bright spot of the day was Hallett's scintillating performance at the tackle position. The tall captain outplayed every opponent sent in against him and repeatedly broke through the Bishop line to drop the ball-carrier for a loss. Goldmeyer played the best game in the backfield, but his tactics, too, were largely confined to defensive measures. All in all, the battle was one in which the green Cincinnati team began by thinking it could win and ended by trying to keep the score within reasonable proportions.
