

Bobcat steamroller in action

The Bearcats, together with a large group of their followers, made the trek to Athens on Migration Day and pitted themselves against Ohio's formidable eleven, the best in the state, and universally hailed as the year's Buckeye Conference champions. The Bearcats fought gamely throughout the entire encounter, but they were far outclassed by the heavier and more experienced Bobcats, who rolled up seven touchdowns and twenty-five first downs during the game. The Green and White line operated like a tidal wave, tearing great gaps in a bewildered Cincy defense, through which the backs rambled for gains ranging from five to thirty-five yards. A number of passes were also used, a tricky underhanded variety resulting in marked success many times. In general, however, the Bobcats were content to show how well a line smashing attack can function with a holding line and a veteran backfield.

Ohio lost no time in scoring, carrying the pigskin across the Red and Black goal twice in the first period after a series of line thrusts. Early in the second quarter, Coach Peden of Ohio began to substitute reserves for his regulars, and the Cincinnati eleven braced sufficiently to hold the foe to a single touchdown, while making two first downs themselves. With the beginning of the second half, all Ohio's regulars returned to the fray and battered down the last vestiges of Varsity's resistance, after which the reserves again took up the burden—now a light one. The Bobcats scored three times in the third period and twice more in the last. A last desperate Cincinnati effort stopped the Green and White tide on the two-yard line as the game ended.

In spite of the uneven battle, there were no indications of a lack of gameness in the Cincinnati team. On the contrary, Art Hallett played the best game of any man on the field and took the limelight away from even the Bobcat backs. Time after time he pounded his way through the Ohio line to break up a play before it was well started. When his younger team-mates wilted under the relentless pressure of the Athens steam-roller, Hallett repeatedly bucked up their spirits for renewed resistance. Injured twice, he played through the last quarter on pure grit until he was forced to leave the game, dazed, amidst a tremendous ovation from the Ohio fans as well as his own admirers. Hallett made an "All Buckeye" position secure by his fine work.

Benham boots one

The other feature of the game was the punting of Goldmeyer and Benham. These two averaged over fifty yards on punts, and their soaring spirals kept Ohio's safety men in hot water. Benham also played a heady game at quarter-back, and showed a brilliant brand of play on the defense, cutting down many runners from behind to save additional scores.
