on old Carson Field. At length, Gilliland, playing his first game at fullback, ripped off an end run which carried the ball to the

The seventh encounter of the season might well have been played on the stage as a "comedy of errors," in which the team which made fewer mistakes won. For in the course of the sixty minutes play between Marietta and Cincinnati everything conceivable occurred, and at the end of the first half one thing inconceivable had actually taken place—Marietta, put on the schedule as a "breather," had decisively outplayed the Bearcats and held a one point lead. The Red and Black gridders appeared over-confident and not until they found themselves running second, did they shake off their lethargic tendencies and start to play ball again.

The first period was dull, with neither team showing any ability to carry on a sustained offense. Both Marietta and Cincinnati resorted to the punting game, and apparently each was waiting for a break. Fumbles were numerous on both sides; in fact, for a time it seemed as if an Alphonse and Gaston act were being rehearsed

Marietta two-yard line. After proceeding to give the fans heart failure by wasting two plays, the Bearcats crashed over for the first score, Gilliland carrying the ball.

After Marietta had kicked off, the Bearcats immediately fumbled, the Pioneers recovering. The up-state team carried the ball to the twenty-five yard line, and then Cincinnati's entire eleven staged a wild hunt to find the ball-carrier while the Marietta half galloped with the grace of an elephant across the Varsity goal. Marietta converted the point, and went into the lead as the half ended.

The Bearcats started a drive goalward as soon as play began again, but were stopped by the Pioneers, who kicked out of danger. After several exchanges of punts, Gilliland suddenly turned into a steam-roller, flattening the opposition for some forty odd yards, and finally tearing loose for twenty yards and a touchdown. The final counter came late in the fourth period, Ed Siding taking the ball over from the five yard line after a long Cincinnati march. This final quarter was featured by its close resemblance to a race riot, for several of the invaders developed pugilistic propensities as the Cincinnati scoring column began to register. Casualties were averted, however, to the disgust of everyone, especially some Bearcats.

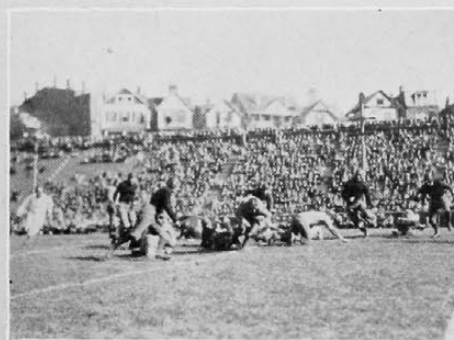

Bill Gilliland, who had done nothing of a spectacular nature in previous games, came to the fore in the Marietta contest. He was shifted from half back to fullback, and the change produced much grief for Marietta, for the big sophomore personally conducted two scoring plays, and accounted for almost two thirds of Cincinnati's eighteen first downs. Hallett starred on the line, but by this game that had come to be an usual feature. The entire team looked like a good ball club in the second half and played real football in that period.
