REMEMBRANCE

By M. B. H.

*When twilight call comes early
And the setting of the sun,
Marks the end of human effort
And life's achievement done;
Who shall call her work unfinished,
Who can say she missed the goal
When her memory still has magic Inspiration for the soul?*

*Friendship seems a dearer token
With life's meaning made more clear
Glimpsing threads of God's own wisdom
In the pattern woven here.
Just a life of cheerful service
Friendly spirit, free from guile
With the echo of her laughter
Lives remembrance of her smile.*

■ Deep within the stadium a small group of fraternity men are singing. Another group is lining up in the dark. Overhead stars twinkle . . .

■ Cigarettes glow now and then in the stands. Today's graduates are tonight's spectators. There are touches of laughter and melancholy . . . People you don't know and never will know, laugh and are silent in the darkness
